WON'S RITINGS

Cadence of a Deep Call: a Call to Move from Blaming to Forgiving

Many times our deepest hurts do not come from strangers but from those who are closest to us, from those who love us and from those whom we love. The relationship between husband wife, parents and children, brothers and sisters, friends and coworkers, pastors and parishioners, etc is where we hurt most. Sometimes, the trauma of this broken relationship can last even long after they died.

The most tragic part in this broken relationship is to keep blaming those whom we think are responsible for our misery and misfortunes. There is also a great temptation in keep blaming those who have brought us to the place of discontentment, dissatisfaction, and suffering. There is a man in the Gospel of John who had blamed someone around him for thirty eight years. He laid there invalid and crippled, waiting for the water to stir up. He had wished somebody to help him for thirty eight years. Jesus came to him and asked him, "Do you want to get well?" Jesus' question is a call to move from blaming to forgiving. He asks the invalid to stop blaming if he wants to get well and just say, "Yes" or "No."

How can we move from blaming to forgiving? First, we need to acknowledge our old hurts. There is no healing when we deny the hurts. Take the fact as it happened. Many things happen beyond our control and our power. Sometimes we bring sufferings to ourselves through our own mistakes such as lack of experiences, discernment and maturity, or sins. Sometimes we were totally powerless. What is important is to acknowledge the fact that something bad happened and it has hurt deeply.

Second, we need to know how to love ourselves. To love ourselves means to accept ourselves as we are and embrace ourselves as a best friend. Loving ourselves is not contradictory to Jesus' teaching. On the contrary, it is the exactly what Jesus asks us to do before we love and forgive others: You shall love your neighbors as yourself. When we are able to embrace ourselves, understand ourselves, and love ourselves, we will truly able to move to the next step.

The last step to move from blaming to forgiving is to forgive those who have sinned against us. Many times the people who have wounded us deeply are also those who have been the victims of abusive relationship. They simply did not know how to break the vicious circle of evil and repeated the wrong doings against us. The only way to stop this evil is to forgive.

In His Name,

Preacher Won

SUMMER

WORSHIP SCHEDULE

Sunday School 8:45am
Traditional Worship Service 10:00am.

Praise & Worship Service
Second Sunday each month at 10:00am. Aug 13.

Sunday's Sermon:

"How do I know that I have received the Holy Spirit?"

Scripture Lesson: John 16: 7-15

Many Christians are not sure whether they have received the Holy Spirit or not. People do not have the confidence and assurance in the Holy Spirit. We know we have the Holy Spirit when we are convicted of our sins, when we confess our Lord, Jesus Christ, when we are comforted in times of grief. The Holy Spirit equips us to do the works for the Kingdom of God. The Holy Spirit changes our character to imitate God. The Holy Spirit also gives us the purpose and meaning in our lives.
